Yamin 2019	S11	Went to Syria in 2013 and joined Al Qaeda. Took part in a video recording which showed that he was part of an armed combat group engaged in fighting against Kurdish forces in northern Syria. He promoted the Al Qaeda cause in the video. The video recording demonstrates that the defendant had entrenched extremist views and fully supported and encouraged the use of violence to achieve the group's aims. Due to his own sight and hearing difficulties, the defendant, although armed with a gun, played a limited combat role. However, he was based near the front line of the fighting and provided active support and encouragement for those group members who were engaged in the actual fighting by driving ambulances, caring for Al Qaeda combatants, as well as what has been described as 'cooking and general maintenance' for the group. On 31 May 2014, shortly before ISIS, or IS, declared a new Caliphate over a large part of the Syrian and neighbouring regions, the defendant returned to this country, having become disillusioned with Al Qaeda and the nature and the course of the armed conflict in Syria. He was arrested on his return and interviewed at Heathrow Airport. Having turned his back on the extremist cause, the defendant returned home and, in due course, resumed his studies and has now completed his degree in civil engineering. Culpability B- active but not prominent member.	14 years for preparation of terrorist acts offence and 4 years concurrent for membership (after trial).
Ward 2019	S11	Pleaded guilty to being a member of the proscribed organisation, National Action. Joined in October 2016 when it was then not a proscribed organisation. In his application he said, "We are at war and it's time for me to fight". He said he was, "A hundred per cent committed", and, quote, "All I have to offer is my thirst for gratuitous violence". He told the leader, he considered himself fanatical. The organisation was proscribed on 16 December 2016 and shortly thereafter he left because he did not consider that National Action, was likely to meet his needs. He "needed to fight" and would "be better use somewhere else". By April he was back and making suggestions for a means of recruitment for further members of what he knew then was a terrorist organisation, suggestions for improved security and particularly training. He was very keen to encourage the others in the need for paramilitary training. He planned a camp and was keen that the organisation was active in its pursuit of its violent, racist objectives and calling	4 years (after trial) for the organisation to do something rather than simply talk about it. By May 2017 he was sending messages within the chat group saying, "Our main goal should be to cause conflicts between different groups of people and force society to collapse. We should become agitators". Arrested on 5 September 2018 he was in possession of extreme right-wing material and had two pistols, an air pistol, and a steel ball bearing gun and two air rifles. Culpability B- active but not prominent member.

Jones, Jack, Cutter 2020	S11	Prior to proscription, all three offenders were members of National Action. Following proscription, all 3 defied the ban and continued active membership. Before proscription JONES was the London regional organiser and heavily involved in the creation of propaganda and artwork for the organisation. After proscription, he was one of only a handful of prominent individuals included in two chat groups known as Inner and Sesh. He met with other prominent members in January 2017 and planned how National Action was going to operate underground. He also co-founded a group called NS131. That organisation was an online artwork platform, but on 28 September 2017 it was proscribed as being an alias of National Action. Furthermore, he designed some artwork for an organisation calling itself Scottish Door which in due course was proscribed as being another alias for National Action. He continued to organise training camps for recruits in which boxing and martial arts were taught and weapons were used, including knives. Over a period of several months he was involved in grooming a 16 year-old girl for membership in the organisation. He played a significant role in the continuity of the organisation. Within the definitive guideline his role was prominent.– culpability A. Although it was accepted that others were more central, and his role fell short of being a leader- thus moved down the range. JACK became a member of National Action in July 2016. On 9 July 2016 he was involved in placing inflammatory and racist stickers on the grounds of the Aston University. Subsequently, he was involved in a number of National Action demonstrations and meetings. Following proscription, he remained a committed member of the organisation and attended eight meetings involving its membership. That includes a meeting in Birmingham where senior members of the organisation set out plans for the group's continuance. Immediately after the ban he was	JONES 5 years 6 months (after trial) JACK, 4 years 6 months (after trial) CUTTER, 3 years (after trial)

		involved in seeking to introduce one of his friends to the organisation. Subsequently, he put forward an idea to create propaganda on behalf of the continuing organisation. In April '17 he was arrested for stirring up racial hatred relating to the stickering at Aston University. But notwithstanding that he remained as a member of National Action and attended two further meetings of the organisation. Despite his dedication to the group it is accepted that he was never in organising or leadership roles- culpability B. Alice Cutter, became a member of National Action in late May or early June of 2016. Following proscription, she continued to express extreme anti-Semitic and racist and revolutionary views and aspirations. She also attended the meeting in Birmingham in which plans were set out by senior members for the group's continuance. She was a trusted confidant of Alex Deakin who was the organiser of the Midland chapter of the continuing group, providing him with encouragement and advice upon recruitment, training and security and spoke of her desire to recruit two women into the organisation. It was accepted that she never held any organising or leadership role - culpability B.
Anderson & Khan 2016	S12	Set up a stall near Oxford Circus to distribute leaflets urging support for ISIS. 'It is clear that you were at that location that day to promote and invite support for ISIS/IS by engaging with and trying to persuade passers by and by handing out leaflets'. It was no coincidence that the pair chose to set the stall up on a day when there was a pro Gaza event in the vicinity that was likely to pass by the stall. 'The danger is that those invited and who succumb are often young people who then, once recruited, will be lured to Syria or Iraq and to a potential death.'	2 years (after trial)
Kahar 2016	S12	Sought to encourage his nephew, brother in law and friend to join IS sending documents and material to them to influence them via social media/ internet chat.	3.5 years (after trial) increased as ULS to 4 years (consecutive to various other sentences for different terrorism)

			offences – total sentence 8 years)
Anjem Choudhary & Mohammed Rahman 2016	S12	Both joined in and became signatories to an oath of allegiance document affirming the legitimacy of the caliphate. Both then took part in lectures broadcast via the internet in which it was said that ISIS had established a legitimate caliphate and there was an obligation on every Muslim to obey the caliph (leader of the caliphate) and to fight those who differed from him. It was also said that apostates (those who renounce this belief) would face capital punishment. Both were highly regarded, influential men within a particular section of the Muslim community in the UK and abroad, followers looked to them for advice and guidance. The audiences were very large, and it is likely that a significant proportion were impressionable people looking for guidance as to how they should act. It was very likely that some of their followers would be influenced by the words to commit acts of violence. The offences were repeated and determined.	Each sentenced to 5 years 6 months (after trial)

Support

Terrorism Act 2000 (section 12)

Triable either way

Maximum: 10 years' custody

Offence range: High level community order – 9 years' custody

Note for offences committed on or after 12 April 2019:

These are specified terrorism offences for the purposes of section 226A (extended sentence for certain violent, sexual or terrorism offences) of the Criminal Justice Act 2003.

Note for offences sentenced on or after 12 April 2019:

These are offences listed in Schedule 18A for the purposes of section 236A (special custodial sentence for certain offenders of particular concern) of the Criminal Justice Act 2003.

This guideline applies only to offenders aged 18 and older

Step 1 – Determining the offence category

The court should determine the offence category with reference only to the factors listed in the tables below. In order to determine the category, the court should assess culpability and harm.

The court should weigh all the factors set out below in determining the offender's culpability.

Where there are characteristics present which fall under different levels of culpability, the court should balance these characteristics to reach a fair assessment of the offender's culpability.

Culpability demonstrated by one or more of the following:

A

- Intentional offence - Offender in position of trust, authority or influence and abuses their position
- Persistent efforts to gain widespread or significant support for organisation
- Encourages activities intended to cause endangerment to life

B

- Reckless offence - Offender in position of trust, authority or influence and abuses their position
- Arranged or played a significant part in the arrangement of a meeting/event aimed at gaining significant support for organisation
- Intended to gain widespread or significant support for organisation
- Encourages activities intended to cause widespread or serious damage to property, or economic interests or substantial impact upon civic infrastructure

C

- Lesser cases where characteristics for categories A or B are not present
- Other reckless offences

Harm

The court should consider the factors set out below to determine the level of harm.

Category 1

- Evidence that others have acted on or been assisted by the encouragement to carry out activities endangering life
- Significant support for the organisation gained or likely to be gained

Category 2

- Evidence that others have acted on or been assisted by the encouragement to carry out activities not endangering life

Category 3

- All other cases

Step 2 - Starting point and category range

Having determined the category at step one, the court should use the corresponding starting point to reach a sentence within the category range below. The starting point applies to all offenders irrespective of plea or previous convictions. A case of particular gravity, reflected by multiple features of culpability or harm in step one, could merit upward adjustment from the starting point before further adjustment for aggravating or mitigating features, set out on the next page.

	A	B	C
1	Starting point 7 years' custody Category range 6-9 years custody	Starting point 5 years' custody Category range 4-6 years custody	Starting point 3 years' custody Category range 2-4 years custody
2	Starting point 6 years' custody Category range 5-7 years custody	Starting point 4 years' custody Category range 3-5 years custody	Starting point 2 years' custody Category range 1-3 years custody
3	Starting point 5 years' custody Category range 4-6 years custody	Starting point 3 years' custody Category range 2-4 years custody	Starting point 1 years' custody Category range High level community order – 2 years custody

The table below contains a non-exhaustive list of additional factual elements providing the context of the offence and factors relating to the offender. Identify whether any combination of these, or other relevant factors, should result in an upward or downward adjustment from the sentence arrived at so far. In particular, relevant recent convictions are likely to result in an upward adjustment. In some cases, having considered these factors, it may be appropriate to move outside the identified category range.

Factors increasing seriousness

Statutory aggravating factors:

- Previous convictions, having regard to a) the nature of the offence to which the conviction relates and its relevance to the current offence; and b) the time that has elapsed since the conviction
- Offence committed whilst on bail
- Offence motivated by, or demonstrating hostility based on any of the following characteristics or presumed characteristics of the victim: religion, race, disability, sexual orientation or transgender identity (When considering this factor, sentencers should bear in mind the statutory definition of terrorism in section 1 of the Terrorism Act 2000, and should be careful to avoid double counting)

Other aggravating factors:

- Used multiple social media platforms to reach a wider audience (where not taken into account at Step One)
- Offender has terrorist connections and/ or motivations
- Vulnerable/impressionable audience
- Failure to respond to warnings
- Failure to comply with current court orders
- Offence committed on licence or Post Sentence Supervision
- Offence committed whilst in prison

Factors reducing seriousness or reflecting personal mitigation

- No previous convictions or no relevant/recent convictions
- Good character and/or exemplary conduct
- Offender has no terrorist connections and/ or motivations
- Unaware that organisation was proscribed
- Clear evidence of a change of mind set prior to arrest
- Offender involved through coercion, intimidation or exploitation
- Offender's responsibility substantially reduced by mental disorder or learning disability
- Age and/or lack of maturity where it affects the responsibility of the offender
- Sole or primary carer for dependent relatives

Step 3 – Consider any factors which indicate a reduction, such as assistance to the prosecution

The court should take into account section 74 of the Sentencing Code (reduction in sentence for assistance to prosecution) and any other rule of law by virtue of which an offender may receive a discounted sentence in consequence of assistance given (or offered) to the prosecutor or investigator.

Step 4 – Reduction for guilty plea

The court should take account of any potential reduction for a guilty plea in accordance with section 73 of the Sentencing Code and the Reduction in Sentence for a Guilty Plea guideline.

Step 5 – Dangerousness

The court should consider whether having regard to the criteria contained in Chapter 6 of Part 10 of the Sentencing Code it would be appropriate to impose an extended sentence (sections 266 and 279)

Step 6 – Required special sentence for certain offenders of particular concern

Where the court does not impose an extended sentence, but does impose a period of imprisonment, the term of the sentence must be equal to the aggregate of the appropriate custodial term and a further period of 1 year for which the offender is to be subject to a licence. (sections 265 and 278 of the Sentencing Code).

Step 7 – Totality principle

If sentencing an offender for more than one offence, or where the offender is already serving a sentence, consider whether the total sentence is just and proportionate to the overall offending behaviour in accordance with the Totality guideline.

Step 8 – Ancillary orders

In all cases the court should consider whether to make ancillary orders.

- Ancillary orders – Crown Court Compendium

Step 9 – Reasons

Section 52 of the Sentencing Code imposes a duty to give reasons for, and explain the effect of, the sentence.

Step 10 – Consideration for time spent on bail (tagged curfew)

The court must consider whether to give credit for time spent on bail in accordance with section 240A of the Criminal Justice Act 2003 and section 325 of the Sentencing Code.

Preparation of terrorist acts Terrorism Act 2006, s.5

Triable only on indictment

Maximum: Life imprisonment

Offence range: 3 years' custody – Life Imprisonment (minimum term 40 years)

This is a Schedule 19 offence for the purposes of sections 274 and 285 (required life sentence for offence carrying life sentence) of the Sentencing Code.

For offences committed on or after 3 December 2012, this is an offence listed in Part 1 of Schedule 15 for the purposes of sections 273 and 283 (life sentence for second listed offence) of the Sentencing Code.

This is a specified offence for the purposes of sections 266 and 279 (extended sentence for certain violent, sexual or terrorism offences) of the Sentencing Code.

This is an offence listed in Schedule 13 for the purposes of sections 265 and 278 (required special sentence for certain offenders of particular concern) of the Sentencing Code.

For offences committed on or after 29 June 2021, this is a serious terrorism offence listed in Part 1 of Schedule 17A for the purposes of sections 268B and 282B (serious terrorism sentence), section 323 (minimum term order: other life sentences), and section 268(4)(b)(iii) and 281(4)(b)(iii) (increase in extension period for serious terrorism offenders) of the Sentencing Code.

This guideline applies only to offenders aged 18 and older.

Step 1 – Determining the offence category

The court should determine the offence category with reference only to the factors listed in the tables below. In order to determine the category the court should assess culpability and harm.

The court should weigh all the factors set out below in determining the offender's culpability.

Where there are characteristics present which fall under different levels of culpability, the court should balance these characteristics to reach a fair assessment of the offender's culpability.

Notes for culpability and harm

In some cases, Law Enforcement Authorities (LEA) may be involved, either posing as terrorists jointly involved in the preparations for terrorist activity, or in keeping the offender under surveillance. Their involvement is likely to ensure that the terrorist activity could never be successfully completed. Irrespective of this, the court should approach the assessment of the offender's culpability and harm as follows:

Culpability

Where an undercover LEA is involved in the preparations for the terrorist activity, the culpability of the offender is not affected by the LEA's involvement. Culpability is to be assessed as if the LEA was a genuine conspirator.

Where the LEA is surveilling the offender and prevents the offender from proceeding further, this is to be treated the same as apprehending the offender.

Harm

In any case that involves LEA, the court should identify the category of harm on the basis of the harm that the offender intended and the viability of the plan, and then applying a downward adjustment at step two.

The extent of this adjustment will be specific to the facts of the case. In cases where, but for the LEA involvement, the offender would have carried out the intended terrorist act, a small reduction within the category range will usually be appropriate.

Where, for instance, an offender voluntarily desisted at an early stage a larger reduction is likely to be appropriate, potentially going outside the category range.

In either instance, it may be that a more severe sentence is imposed where very serious terrorist activity was intended but did not take place than where relatively less serious terrorist activity did take place.

Culpability demonstrated by one or more of the following:*A

- Acting alone, or in a leading role, in terrorist activity where preparations were complete or were so close to completion that, but for apprehension, the activity was very likely to have been carried out

B

- Acting alone, or in a leading role, in terrorist activity where preparations were advanced and, but for apprehension, the activity was likely to have been carried out
- Significant role in terrorist activity where preparations were complete or were so close to completion that, but for apprehension, the activity was very likely to have been carried out
- Offender has coordinated others to take part in terrorist activity, whether in the UK or abroad (where not falling within A)

C

- Leading role in terrorist activity where preparations were not far advanced
- Significant role in terrorist activity where preparations were advanced and, but for apprehension, the activity was likely to have been carried out
- Lesser role in terrorist activity where preparations were complete or were so close to completion that, but for apprehension, the activity was very likely to have been carried out
- Offender acquires training or skills for purpose of terrorist activity (where not falling within A or B)
- Acts of significant assistance or encouragement of other(s) (where not falling within A or B)

D

- Offender has engaged in very limited preparation for terrorist activity
- Act(s) of lesser assistance or encouragement of other(s)
- Other cases not falling within A, B or C

Harm

Harm is assessed based on the type of harm risked and the likelihood of that harm being caused. When considering the likelihood of harm, the court should consider the viability of any plan.

See the notes for culpability and harm at the start of this section before proceeding

Category 1

- Multiple deaths risked and very likely to be caused

Category 2

- Multiple deaths risked but not very likely to be caused
- Any death risked and very likely to be caused

Category 3

- Any death risked but not very likely to be caused
- Risk of widespread or serious damage to property or economic interests
- Risk of a substantial impact upon civic infrastructure
- Any other cases

Step 2 - Starting point and category range

Offenders committing the most serious offences are likely to be found dangerous and so the table below includes options for life sentences. However, the court should consider the dangerousness provisions in all cases, having regard to the criteria contained in section 308 of the Sentencing Code to make the appropriate determination. (See STEP 6 below). The court must also consider the provisions set out in s323 (3) of the Sentencing Code (minimum term order for serious terrorism offenders).(See STEP 3 below).

Where the dangerousness provisions are met but a life sentence is not justified, the court should consider whether the provisions for the imposition of a serious terrorism sentence have been met, having regard to the criteria contained in s268B (adult offenders aged under 21) or s282B (offenders aged 21 and over) of the Sentencing Code. If the criteria are met, a minimum custodial sentence of 14 years applies. (see STEP 3 below).

Where the dangerousness provisions are not met the court must apply the provisions set out in sections 265 and 278 of the Sentencing Code (required special sentence for certain offenders of particular concern). (See STEP 7 below).

Harm	Culpability
	A	B	C	D
1	Starting point Life imprisonment - minimum term 35 years' custody	Starting point Life imprisonment - minimum term 25 years' custody	Starting point Life imprisonment - minimum term 15 years' custody	Starting point 15 years' custody

* For serious terrorism cases the minimum term must be at least 14 years' unless exceptional circumstances apply. See s323 (3) of the Sentencing Code.

** Where a Serious Terrorism Sentence is imposed, the appropriate custodial term is a minimum of 14 years (s282C Sentencing Code).

The table below contains a non-exhaustive list of additional factual elements providing the context of the offence and factors relating to the offender. Identify whether any combination of these, or other relevant factors, should result in an upward or downward adjustment from the sentence arrived at so far. In particular, relevant recent convictions are likely to result in an upward adjustment. In some cases, having considered these factors, it may be appropriate to move outside the identified category range.

Factors increasing seriousness

Statutory aggravating factors

- Previous convictions, having regard to a) the nature of the offence to which the conviction relates and its relevance to the current offence; and b) the time that has elapsed since the conviction
- Offence committed whilst on bail
- Offence motivated by, or demonstrating hostility based on any of the following characteristics or presumed characteristics of the victim: religion, race, disability, sexual orientation or transgender identity (When considering this factor, sentencers should bear in mind the statutory definition of terrorism in section 1 of the Terrorism Act 2000, and should be careful to avoid double counting)

Other aggravating factors

- Recent and/or repeated possession or accessing of extremist material
- Communication with other extremists
- Deliberate use of encrypted communications or similar technologies to facilitate the commission of the offence and/or avoid or impede detection
- Offender attempted to disguise their identity to prevent detection
- Indoctrinated or encouraged others
- Preparation was with a view to engage in combat with UK armed forces
- Conduct in preparation includes the actual or planned commission of other offences, where not taken into account in step one
- Failure to respond to warnings
- Failure to comply with current court orders
- Offence committed on licence or Post Sentence Supervision
- Offence committed whilst in prison

Factors reducing seriousness or reflecting personal mitigation

- No previous convictions or no relevant/recent convictions
- Good character and/or exemplary conduct
- Offender involved through coercion, intimidation or exploitation
- Clear evidence of a change of mind set prior to arrest
- Offender's responsibility substantially reduced by mental disorder or learning disability
- Age and/or lack of maturity where it affects the responsibility of the offender
- Sole or primary carer for dependent relatives

Step 3 – Minimum terms, Serious Terrorism Sentences and exceptional circumstances

Life Sentence Minimum Terms

For serious terrorism cases the life sentence minimum term must be at least 14 years' unless the court is of the opinion that there are exceptional circumstances relating to the offence or to the offender which justify a lesser period.

A "serious terrorism case" is a case where, but for the fact that the court passes a life sentence, the court would be required by section 268B(2) or 282B(2) to impose a serious terrorism sentence (s323 (3) of the Sentencing Code).

Serious Terrorism Sentence - Minimum Custodial Sentence

Where the criteria for a serious terrorism sentence are met, as set out in s268B (adult offenders aged under 21) or s282B (offenders aged 21 and over) of the Sentencing Code, then the court must impose the sentence unless the court is of the opinion that there are exceptional circumstances relating to the offence or to the offender which justify not doing so.

Where a Serious Terrorism Sentence is imposed, the appropriate custodial term is a minimum of 14 years" (s282C Sentencing Code).

Exceptional circumstances

In considering whether there are exceptional circumstances that would justify not imposing the minimum term (in the case of a life sentence), or not imposing the Serious Terrorism Sentence where the other tests are met, the court must have regard to:

- the particular circumstances of the offence and
- the particular circumstances of the offender.

either of which may give rise to exceptional circumstances

Where the factual circumstances are disputed, the procedure should follow that of a Newton hearing: see Criminal Practice Directions VII: Sentencing B.

Where the issue of exceptional circumstances has been raised the court should give a clear explanation as to why those circumstances have or have not been found.

Principles

Circumstances are exceptional if the imposition of the minimum term (in the case of a life sentence), or not imposing the Serious Terrorism Sentence would result in an arbitrary and disproportionate sentence.

The circumstances must truly be exceptional. It is important that courts do not undermine the intention of Parliament and the deterrent purpose of the provisions by too readily accepting exceptional circumstances.

The court should look at all of the circumstances of the case taken together. A single striking factor may amount to exceptional circumstances, or it may be the collective impact of all of the relevant circumstances.

The mere presence of one or more of the following should not in itself be regarded as exceptional:

- One or more lower culpability factors
- One or more mitigating factors
- A plea of guilty

Where exceptional circumstances are found

If there are exceptional circumstances that justify not imposing the minimum term (in the case of a life sentence) then the court must impose a shorter minimum.

If there are exceptional circumstances that justify not imposing a Serious Terrorism Sentence, then the court must impose an alternative sentence.

Note: a guilty plea reduction applies in the normal way if a Serious Terrorism Sentence is not imposed (see step 5 – Reduction for guilty pleas).

Step 4 – Consider any factors which indicate a reduction, such as assistance to the prosecution

The court should take into account section 74 of the Sentencing Code (reduction in sentence for assistance to prosecution) and any other rule of law by virtue of which an offender may receive a discounted sentence in consequence of assistance given (or offered) to the prosecutor or investigator.

Step 5 – Reduction for guilty plea

The court should take account of any potential reduction for a guilty plea in accordance with section 73 of the Sentencing Code and the Reduction in Sentence for a Guilty Plea guideline.

Where a serious terrorism sentence has been imposed, the court must ensure that any reduction for a guilty plea does not reduce the sentence to less than 80 per cent of the statutory minimum.

Step 6 – Dangerousness

The court should consider:

1) whether having regard to the criteria contained in Chapter 6 of Part 10 of the Sentencing Code it would be appropriate to impose a life sentence (sections 274 and 285)

2) whether having regard to sections 273 and 283 of the Sentencing Code it would be appropriate to impose a life sentence.

3) whether having regard to the criteria contained in Chapter 6 of Part 10 of the Sentencing Code it would be appropriate to impose an extended sentence (sections 266 and 279)

When sentencing offenders to a life sentence under these provisions, the notional determinate sentence should be used as the basis for the setting of a minimum term.

Step 7 – Required special sentence for certain offenders of particular concern

Where the court does not impose a sentence of imprisonment for life or an extended sentence, or a Serious Terrorism Sentence but does impose a period of imprisonment, the term of the sentence must be equal to the aggregate of the appropriate custodial term and a further period of 1 year for which the offender is to be subject to a licence (sections 265 and 278 of the Sentencing Code).

Step 8 – Totality principle

If sentencing an offender for more than one offence, or where the offender is already serving a sentence, consider whether the total sentence is just and proportionate to the overall offending behaviour in accordance with the Totality guideline.

Step 9 – Ancillary orders

In all cases the court should consider whether to make ancillary orders.

- Ancillary orders – Crown Court Compendium

Step 10 – Reasons

Section 52 of the Sentencing Code imposes a duty to give reasons for, and explain the effect of, the sentence.

Step 11 – Consideration for time spent on bail (tagged curfew)

The court must consider whether to give credit for time spent on bail in accordance with section 240A of the Criminal Justice Act 2003 and section 325 of the Sentencing Code.

Totality guideline: research with sentencers

The Sentencing Council is reviewing the Totality guideline,<sup>1</sup> which has been in force since 2012. The guideline is of wide application in all courts. It has received some criticism from academics, including: that it is rarely referred to (Harris, 2015); that there is little evidence its principles are widely known by sentencers (Ashworth, 2017); and that it does not help determine how to quantify sentence reductions (Harris, 2015). The Council has also identified that the guideline might be out of date in terms of some of its content and style. Therefore, we conducted qualitative research with sentencers to explore their views of the guideline and how it is currently used in practice, with the aim of informing a discussion about whether the guideline needs revising and in what way.

The aims of the research are:

- To understand how sentencers use the guideline;
- To explore sentencers' attitudes towards the guideline; and
- To identify any potential problems or issues with the guideline.

Method

The first stage of the research was carried out by online survey, via SmartSurvey. The survey used Likert scale questions<sup>2</sup> to measure respondents' use of the guideline and their attitudes towards it. It also asked open-ended questions to understand in more detail respondents' views of the guideline.<sup>3</sup> A link to the survey was emailed to members of the Council's research 'pool' (approximately 550 sentencers). The survey was open for three weeks, from 4 March to 21 March 2021. A total of 130 responses were received, from three Court of Appeal judges, one High Court judge, 42 circuit judges, 10 district judges and 74 magistrates.

Eighty survey respondents indicated that they were willing to participate in a follow-up interview. We aimed to select a stratified random sample of 10 participants, covering each type of sentencer who responded to the survey. We were unable to organise an interview with a district judge, and so our final sample was composed of one Court of Appeal judge, one High Court judge, four circuit judges and four magistrates. The interviews, lasting approximately 30 minutes, were designed to follow up on some of the points raised by sentencers in response to the survey and explore these in more detail. We asked interviewees a series of questions about how they use and view the guideline, as well as about their views on some of the findings which had come out of the survey responses. They were also shown an alternative format for the guideline and asked for their views on this.<sup>4</sup>

In both pieces of the research, participants were self-selecting and the sample sizes are small, particularly in relation to specific subsamples. The findings are therefore not necessarily representative of sentencing practice and should be taken as indicative rather than conclusive.

<sup>1</sup> When sentencing an offender for more than one offence, or where the offender is already serving a sentence, courts must consider whether the total sentence is just and proportionate to the overall offending behaviour. The Totality guideline sets out the principles to be followed, the approach for different types of sentence and gives examples of how sentences should be structured in different circumstances.

Key findings

- Most survey respondents agreed with the current content in each section of the guideline and agreed that the guideline provides practical help in sentencing. There were several positive comments regarding the guideline's examples, clarity and usefulness.
- The most common way that survey respondents said they used the guideline is to apply its principles and consult it only for difficult or unusual cases. Accordingly, both survey respondents and interviewees commented on their infrequent use of the guideline.
- Some survey respondents highlighted perceived problems with the guideline, such as difficulties ascertaining appropriate financial penalties for multiple offences. Nearly half of survey respondents reported that there are certain types of offence where they have problems applying the guideline. This included offences with multiple victims and offences which are dissimilar, as well as specific offences such as sexual offences, assaults, driving offences, thefts, and drug offences. Interviewees largely agreed with these identified offences and highlighted sexual offences and driving offences as posing particular difficulties. They also commented that, in cases with multiple victims and a range of offending, they experience problems reflecting the seriousness of the offending against each individual victim in the final sentence.
- While some survey respondents asked for more detail in the guideline, more commonly there were comments that the guideline is overly detailed and lengthy, as well as requests for improvements to be made to its format. Most interviewees thought the current examples contained in the guideline are sufficient. When discussing ideas for improving the format of the guideline, most were positive (particularly with regards to bullet points, drop-down menus and tables).
- Several survey respondents commented that some sections of the guideline have no relevance to magistrates' courts while other sections have little relevance in the Crown Court. However, most interviewees did not find this a problem and preferred to keep the same document across jurisdictions.
- Some survey respondents expressed concerns regarding external perceptions of totality and its perceived leniency, and most interviewees agreed that this is a problem. Half the interviewees thought that including a reminder to explain in court how the sentence has been constructed would be helpful, while others commented that the problem lies in public education and press coverage and that altering the guideline would not solve this issue.

Detailed findings

Use of the guideline

Around half (51 per cent; 66) of survey respondents reported that most cases they sentence involve more than one offence, with 15 per cent (19) reporting that most cases involve just one offence and the remaining 35 per cent (45) saying that the split is about even. When asked whether they usually find it more difficult to sentence cases involving more than one offence, 36 per cent (47) of respondents said that they usually find it more difficult, 25 per cent (32) said that they find it 'about the same' and 39 per cent (51) said that the difficulty varies.

Figure 1: Responses to the question ‘When sentencing more than one offence on the same occasion, or when sentencing an offender who is already serving a sentence, which of the following statements most closely reflects your use of the Totality guideline?’<sup>5</sup>

Most sentencing guidelines have a totality step which reads something like this:

If sentencing an offender for more than one offence, or where the offender is already serving a sentence, consider whether the total sentence is just and proportionate to the overall offending behaviour. See Totality guideline.

Nearly all (95 per cent; 123) of survey respondents reported being somewhat or very familiar with the totality step in the sentencing guidelines. Additionally, 69 per cent (90) said that the inclusion of this step is useful or very useful. When the totality step applies, 2 per cent (3) of respondents said that they always consult the Totality guideline, and a further 20 per cent (26) reported that they consult it often or sometimes. The most common way of using the guideline, reported by 55 per cent (72) of respondents, is to apply its principles and consult it only for difficult or unusual cases. A further 19 per cent (25) of respondents reported that they had used the guideline previously and apply its principles without consulting it directly. These were the most common ways of using the guideline across all sentencer types who responded to the survey. Only 3 per cent (4) of respondents stated that they had never used the guideline. Overall, survey respondents commented that the guideline is currently underused or used infrequently: one circuit judge stated that “it is one of the least used guidelines”. Several magistrates commented that they tend to get advice from the legal adviser rather than the guideline when considering totality.

We asked interviewees how often they refer to the Totality guideline. One circuit judge reported that they refer to it two or three times a week, and another circuit judge said that they refer to it “regularly” when sentencing cases with multiple offences. However, the other interviewees commented that they refer to it rarely or not very often. Two magistrates commented that they use the guideline to train other magistrates or in discussions with their colleagues about totality when sentencing, while other sentencers commented that they refer to the guideline in instances such as where they have a particularly complex case or are sentencing a case without a specific guideline. One magistrate commented that “we could all do with a bit of training on it... what its underlying principles and intentions are, then perhaps how to use it”. Interviewees had a range of sentencing experience, from three to 27 years’, and there was no obvious correlation between years’ experience and the frequency with which interviewees use the guideline.

Usefulness of the guideline

Around half (53 per cent; 69) of survey respondents told us that they find the Totality guideline useful or very useful, with a further 41 per cent (53) stating that they find the guideline somewhat useful. Despite this, 47 per cent (61) of respondents reported that there are particular types of offence that pose difficulties when applying the guideline. When asked for more detail on these offences, the most common examples listed were sexual offences (including historical sexual offences), assaults, driving offences, thefts, and drug offences (including where firearms are involved). Several sentencers reported that offences involving multiple victims pose particular difficulties, as well as offences which are dissimilar or unrelated.

Having identified these themes from the survey data, we asked interviewees whether any of these types of offences posed them problems when applying the Totality guideline, and whether they had any suggestions for how the guideline could provide more help in any of these situations. All but one interviewee (the High Court judge) agreed that some or all of these offences pose difficulties. However, four of the ten interviewees said that either the guideline was not the issue, or that they did not have any suggestions as to what the guideline could do to help. Sexual offences and driving offences were the main offences identified by interviewees as causing particular difficulties in this part of the research.

The Court of Appeal judge suggested that further “mathematical” guidance regarding appropriate reductions might be helpful where similar offences have been committed over a period of time.<sup>6</sup> However, they acknowledged that there would be difficulties with such an approach and that there would be exceptions, including “some situations where you end up with a ridiculous sentence”.

One circuit judge reported having difficulties sentencing multiple historical sexual offences where some have different maximum sentences as a result of having been committed prior to the 2003 Act. This judge also commented on the difficulties of composing and explaining a sentence where there are multiple counts on one indictment, which they said is a common situation in sexual offences and cases where offenders are convicted of multiple dissimilar offences. They suggested that, instead of having to look at and remark upon each count individually before coming up with a just and proportionate final sentence, “it might be helpful to have in the guidelines that one of the options is to take a lead offence”.

Problems applying the guideline to multiple driving offences were identified by all four magistrates and one of the circuit judges, including in cases where the offender is also being sentenced for unrelated offences. Two of the magistrates explained that it is difficult to balance financial penalties with the seriousness of offending in these types of cases. One said that “even with totality, the guidance can lead you to too high a sentence in terms of fines and their affordability” and suggested that magistrates could receive refresher training on fines. The other commented that a maximum of a band C fine and disqualification is not “appropriate” in instances either where life-changing harm has been caused, or where the person being fined is already in financial distress. This sentencer wanted the guideline to contain the option of taking cases into the area of community penalties in these situations.<sup>7</sup>

In interview, four sentencers highlighted problems with explaining the final sentence when there are multiple victims. Three circuit judges explained that there are particular difficulties reflecting the crimes on victims of the more minor sexual offences in a case involving multiple counts, because they become less visible in the context of the most serious offence. One of these judges said that, instead of imposing one extended sentence which reflects all the criminality:

I think there should be a way that the guideline sets out where you can and can't impose for example a lesser sentence, a significantly lesser sentence, but still reflect the criminality on that particular victim.

The guideline's examples

Survey responses relating to the guideline's clarity and detail were largely positive, and several respondents reported that they like the examples given in each section. Respondents told us that the guideline helps them to work out how sentences can be combined, with one circuit judge stating that the guideline “is specifically and importantly useful in considering the interplay between consecutive and concurrent sentences”. However, some respondents asked for more detail and a greater number of specific examples.

<sup>6</sup> The Totality guideline does not provide precise information on how to calculate reductions in individual sentences to take into account the totality of offending, rather it talks in terms of considering whether the total sentence is ‘just and proportionate’.

<sup>7</sup> There are legal limitations on when a community penalty can be imposed which would limit the scope of this suggestion.

We asked interviewees what their views were on the guideline's inclusion of examples of particular combinations of offences and the approach that should be taken when sentencing them. One circuit judge said that the guideline is not the place for examples and that the Bench Book would be the better place for them. However, the other interviewees all expressed positive views about their inclusion, calling them "helpful" and "a good starting point".

In contrast, the Court of Appeal judge said that, for more experienced sentencers "who know this bit and are more interested in the acute problems you get with a whole series of similar offences", the examples are less useful and "don't go far enough". One circuit judge wanted the examples to be updated to cover more specific problems, including how to combine sentences where offenders have to serve two-thirds of some sentences and half of other sentences. This sentencer also wanted further "worked examples" detailing how to structure sentences. Another circuit judge similarly commented, "I was going to say that it would be nice to have some actual examples of percentages to reduce by, but it's impossible to do that".

Despite these suggestions, most interviewees thought that the examples are sufficient and that it is not necessary to include more. One circuit judge commented, "I think the examples are about right actually. Because they are specific examples, but they give you a good feel for what you ought to be doing." Two interviewees (from the High Court and magistrates' court) also said that offering more detail could result in the guideline becoming very long.

Layout and usability of the guideline

Among the survey responses, comments that the guideline is overly detailed and lengthy for regular use in a busy court were more common than requests for more examples. One magistrate said that "there is rarely the time to ponder and absorb material of this kind". Respondents made the following suggestions for improving the guideline's format: the inclusion of flow charts; matrices; more tables; a reference index or table; concise summaries of each section and the use of bullet points rather than prose.

We explored with interviewees the issue that had been raised in the survey that some people felt that the guideline was difficult to use in a busy court. We asked them what they thought about the suggestions for tables, bullet points and flowcharts as a way of making the guideline easier to use, or if they had any other ideas that might help with this issue.

Four interviewees (from the Crown Court, High Court and Court of Appeal) commented that they do not find the guideline difficult to use. In comparison, one circuit judge said that the guideline is "not the easiest to follow, but that's because it's not a tabular type guideline like the offence guidelines". Two magistrates also commented that they are unlikely to use the guideline in a busy court unless it is an exceptional case.

Despite this range of opinions about whether they personally find the guideline difficult to use, interviewees were generally positive about the potential to alter the format to make the guideline easier to use, although views on the specific ideas suggested were mixed. Views on more use of bullet points were generally positive. The Court of Appeal judge and one magistrate expressed positive views about flowcharts, while a different magistrate and the High Court judge said that they did not like this idea. Four interviewees liked the idea of more tables, with one saying that it would allow them to find the part of the guideline they needed more quickly.

Interviewees also suggested that the main principles of totality could be shortened and placed on one page, and that headings and important parts such as the general principles section could be put in bold. One circuit judge suggested that “it might be better just to highlight the different sections more effectively because it all runs into one as it looks at the moment”. Another circuit judge also commented that “if it was set out with steps like in the modern guidelines, that might be helpful”.

Interviewees were also shown a mocked up a version of the guideline with the same content but with the examples placed in drop-down menus. We then asked interviewees their opinions of using such a format to condense the guideline. Three interviewees (from the Crown Court, High Court and Court of Appeal) did not like the idea of drop-down menus, saying that the online guidelines should contain the guidance on the page in full and should match the paper guidelines. One commented that “if you have got to click on things then you might miss them”. The other seven interviewees were in favour of the drop-down menu format, commenting that it would make the guideline appear shorter on the page, would mean less scrolling, and would mean that the main points remain on the page while the examples could be accessed if needed. Three interviewees also mentioned that this format is good as it aligns with how other new guidelines are presented.

Sections of the guideline

For each section of the guideline, we asked survey respondents the extent to which they agree with what the section says, and the extent to which they agree that the section provides practical help in sentencing.

Figure 3: Responses to the question ‘Looking at X section, to what extent do you agree with what is said in this section?’

Figure 4: Responses to the question ‘To what extent to do you agree that X section provides practical help in sentencing?’

For each section, at least 65 per cent of respondents reported agreeing with what is said. Furthermore, at least 88 per cent of respondents agree or somewhat agree with what is said. Lower proportions of respondents reported that they agree that each section provides practical help in sentencing: responses of agreement ranged from 48 per cent (General principles) to 58 per cent (General approach as applied to Determinate Custodial sentences). However, for each section, at least 84 per cent of respondents reported that they agree or somewhat agree that it provides practical help.

Survey respondents were asked to provide more detail of their views on each section of the guideline:

General principles

Respondents commented that the ‘General principles’ section is a “useful”, “clear” and “straightforward” guide and a reminder of the overall principles of totality. However, some respondents noted that this section does not give practical help. One magistrate said that this section contains “general statements, rather than specific advice”. Two respondents (a Court of Appeal judge and a circuit judge) commented that the section is of little practical use as the principles are already familiar to sentencers, especially those who are experienced.

General approach (as applied to Determinate Custodial sentences)

Several respondents gave positive comments about the advice regarding concurrent and consecutive sentences in the ‘General approach (as applied to Determinate Custodial sentences)’ section, describing it as “clear” and “useful used in conjunction with specific sentencing guidelines”. However, some sentencers highlighted perceived problems with this advice. Two circuit judges queried the robbery with a firearm example. One believed it to be unclear in what it says about the weapon being ancillary to and not distinct and independent of the robbery. The other stated that there is Court of Appeal authority that there should be a consecutive sentence for the firearm. Additionally, in relation to the guidance about domestic violence, a magistrate commented:

[The guideline] specifies that consecutive sentences should be considered if the offences are domestic violence, but this is specifically not included as an aggravating factor in common assault cases, as has been pointed out by defence lawyers.

One respondent wrote that there are issues in magistrates' courts when sentencing spree offenders who move in and out of remand custody before facing sentence for multiple minor offences. This magistrate said that the situation becomes complex for the sentencer if new offences are subsequently committed during a suspended sentence order and the sentencer has to work out which sentence to reactivate. The respondent asked:

Given the difficulties in part-activating a suspended sentence constructed from multiple short sentences could the guidance address whether a global sentence would be a preferable approach to multiple short sentences, particularly when such sentences are to be suspended?

One magistrate commented that this section would be improved by dividing it into Crown Court considerations and magistrates' court considerations.

Specific applications – custodial sentences

Survey responses were largely positive regarding the 'Specific applications – custodial sentences' section. Respondents commented that the section is "clear" and provides "a useful framework and guidance". However, some points of disagreement with the guidance were highlighted. Three sentencers (a circuit judge, district judge and magistrate) disagreed with the guidance concerning recalled prisoners.<sup>8</sup> Two wrote that it is "unjust" and "defies common sense" not to impose a consecutive sentence, while the circuit judge wrote:

I am not convinced that the guidance is correct as regards recalled prisoners. As I understand it any new sentence must be concurrent. SC s.225, R.v. McStravick 2018 EWCA Crim 1207.

Another circuit judge stated that the advice on imposing a determinate sentence on someone already serving a custodial sentence is "too simplistic" as it does not take into account cases such as historical sexual offences or multiple burglaries where the offender chose to hide their other offences when originally sentenced. The same respondent also disagreed that sentences should generally be consecutive if the offence post-dates the offence for which the offender is in custody.

Some respondents commented that elements of this section (including determinate sentences, indeterminate sentences, and extended sentences for public protection) have little relevance to the magistrates' courts. However, one magistrate wrote that although the section was aimed at Crown Court users, "it does have some implications when sentencing historical offences". One district judge commented that it would be helpful to have guidance on applying consecutive sentences when required to take into consideration the maximum sentencing powers of the magistrates' court.

Specific applications – non-custodial sentences

Survey responses were largely positive with regards to the 'Specific applications – non-custodial sentences' section. Comments included that the section is helpful in determining which sentences can and cannot be combined, and that the guidance is "clear" and "comprehensive".

<sup>8</sup> The position relating to recalled prisoners is covered by legislation (section 225 of the Sentencing Code).

Several respondents, mostly magistrates, made comments in relation to ascertaining fines and compensation. Two magistrates and a circuit judge wrote that the section is particularly useful in this respect. Three magistrates commented on the importance of ascertaining whether an offender has the ability to pay any financial penalties. A further magistrate commented that it would be beneficial if the guideline provided advice on “occasions where the totality element takes the calculated fine above the maximum fine for the most serious offence and holding the fine at the maximum does not feel just and proportionate”.

Several survey respondents commented that the cases in ‘Specific applications – non-custodial sentences’ occur often in the magistrates’ court. Three circuit judges commented that this section is rarely relevant in the Crown Court.

The relevance of different sections for different jurisdictions

Following on from points raised in the survey that some parts of the guideline are not relevant to magistrates’ courts and others are rarely relevant to the Crown Court, we asked interviewees whether they had any views on this and whether they thought it could be helpful to have sections specifically for each jurisdiction.

The High Court judge and one magistrate were in favour of having sections specifically for each jurisdiction. The magistrate said that the sections on indeterminate and extended sentences were not relevant in magistrates’ courts, while the sections on fines and community orders were particularly relevant. Additionally, a further magistrate commented that it would be nice to have a guideline tailored to the magistrates’ courts but said they were unsure whether this would be practical, and a circuit judge suggested that magistrates might need a more comprehensive guideline “because they are probably less used to the principles than most judges”.

In comparison, two interviewees (from the Court of Appeal and magistrates’ courts) highlighted potential problems with having different versions of the guideline across jurisdictions. The Court of Appeal judge gave the example of a serial offender being committed to the Crown Court but then being acquitted of the most serious offences and as a result “the Crown Court judge is then sentencing almost as if they are in a magistrates’ court”. The magistrate commented that they sit in the youth courts where, especially due to the backlog caused by the COVID situation, they sentence serious crimes for which it is useful to have Crown Court guidance. Additionally, five other interviewees said that they either do not experience problems with all the information being contained in one guideline because they “just go to what [they] need”, or that they would simply prefer one document covering all jurisdictions. Two interviewees also commented that the other suggestions for making the guideline easier to use, particularly the drop-down menus, could address this issue.

External perception of totality

Several survey respondents raised concerns about the general lack of public understanding of totality, including among defendants, and the perception by victims and the public that totality results in leniency. Some, therefore, suggested that the guideline could include a reminder to explain in court how the sentence has been constructed.

We asked interviewees whether they thought this external perception of totality was a problem. We also asked whether they thought the inclusion of a reminder to explain in court how the sentence has been constructed would help, or if they had any other suggestions for addressing this perception.

Two interviewees (a High Court judge and a circuit judge) commented that they disagreed about there being a lack of understanding of totality among defendants. However, nine interviewees agreed that there is a general problem regarding the perception that totality results in leniency, particularly from among the public and victims. Three of these sentencers (two circuit judges and a magistrate) commented that the problem lies mainly in a combination of press reporting and a lack of education among the public, and that the guideline is unlikely to be able to help with this. One circuit judge and two magistrates made similar comments regarding the importance of how the sentence is reported back to victims by police officers, the prosecution and witness services, with the circuit judge suggesting that police officers could receive more training on how multiple offences are sentenced so that they are better able to explain sentences to victims.

While it was commented by several interviewees that sentencers explain the effects of totality anyway, five interviewees agreed that a reminder to explain in court how the sentence has been constructed would be helpful. The Court of Appeal judge said that the guideline “could give three short sentences which would then be capable of being used by any judge who wanted to use them in an appropriate case” and one circuit judge thought it would be helpful “if there was a phrase which could be used, or suggested to be used, in a way which would resonate with the victims and the police and the other people who hear this”. One of the magistrates suggested that a totality pronouncement card, similar to the youth pronouncement cards, would be useful.

Three interviewees said that this perception of leniency was linked to sentences being passed which do not reflect the harm caused to particular victims. One magistrate commented that not being able to go outside the sentencing limits for offences means that some of the guidance for multiple offences is “jarring”. One circuit judge said:

The key thing is to ensure that where there are two victims and one offence is much more severe than the other, it's better to pass a concurrent sentence where you still are heard to say that it was a longish sentence for the lesser offence, than to diminish the sentence for the lesser offence because of totality.

Identifying this same problem, but suggesting a different solution, another circuit judge commented:

I think it's important to sometimes reflect [multiple offences] by way of consecutive sentences or sentences that mean something to each victim. Because I think it is an issue with the principle, not that you can change that.

Annex A: survey questionnaire

The Sentencing Council would be very grateful for your participation in this short survey. The Totality guideline has been in force since 2012 and the Council is carrying out some exploratory work to see what sentencers think of the guideline. Please feel free to express your views - there are no right or wrong answers.

The responses will be collated and reported to the Council, but will not be attributable to any individual.

It will be helpful if you have a copy of the Totality guideline open to refer to during the survey. You can find it here (right click to open the link in a new tab on a computer; click and hold to open in a new tab on a phone or tablet).

It should take approximately 15 minutes to complete the survey. Questions marked with an * must be answered.

The Council's privacy notice can be found here.

Thank you again for your help with our work in this area.

1. What type of sentencer are you? *

- Court of Appeal Judge
- High Court Judge
- Circuit Judge
- Recorder
- District Judge
- Deputy District Judge
- Magistrate

2. How often do the cases you sentence involve more than one offence? *

- Most cases involve more than one offence
- Most cases involve just one offence
- The split is about even

3. What has been your experience of sentencing cases involving more than one offence? *

- I usually find it more difficult to sentence cases involving more than one offence
- I usually find it easier to sentence cases involving more than one offence
- I usually find it about the same as sentencing cases involving just one offence

Annex B: Interview discussion guide

1. How many years' experience do you have as a sentencer?
2. How often do you refer to the Totality guideline?

In our survey, we asked for types of offences that posed problems when applying the totality guideline in court. Responses included:

- offences with multiple victims and offences which are dissimilar or unrelated; and
  - particular specific types of offences – e.g. sexual offences; assaults; driving offences; thefts; and drug offences.
3. Do you find that any of these offences pose problems when applying the totality guideline?
  4. Do you have any suggestions for how the guideline could provide more help in any of these situations?

The guideline currently contains examples of particular combinations of offences and the approach that should be taken when sentencing them. Views on the provisions of these examples were mixed – some respondents found them helpful and wanted more, while others thought there were too many.

5. Do you have any views on this?

Several sentencers said that the guideline was difficult to use in a busy court. Suggestions for making it easier to use included more use of tables, bullet points, or flowcharts.

6. Do you have any views on these suggestions? Or do you have any other ideas that might help with this issue?

We have mocked up a version of the guideline with a slightly different format, but with the same content. Can I share my screen to show it to you?

7. What are your views on using a similar format to this mocked-up version to condense the guideline?

It was pointed out that some parts of the guideline are not relevant to magistrates' courts and others are rarely relevant to the Crown Court.

8. Do you have any views on this, and do you think it could be helpful to have sections specifically for each jurisdiction?

Concerns were raised about the general lack of public understanding of totality (including among defendants) and the perception by victims, law enforcement and the public that totality results in leniency. There were some suggestions that the guideline should include a reminder to explain in court how the sentence has been constructed.

9. Do you think this external perception is a problem, and if so, do you have any other suggestions for addressing it?

10. Is there anything else that you would like to mention in relation to the Totality guideline which the Council should consider?

Independent Anti-Slavery Commissioner's (IASC) Response to Sentencing Council Consultation on Modern Slavery Offences

Written by Detective Inspector Richard Marsh, Law Enforcement Policy Lead, and reviewed and endorsed by Dame Sara Thornton, the Independent Anti-Slavery Commissioner.

Question 1: Do you have any comments on the proposed culpability factors?

1.1 – Culpability factors need more flexibility to address the range of methods to control a victim.

The draft guidelines succeed in avoiding unhelpful stereotypes of locks and chains by the removal of 'physical restraint' from the culpability factors. However, the current draft describes culpability category A as involving "Use or threat of a substantial degree of physical/sexual violence or abuse". As a consequence, other equally damaging methods of control are unlikely to be sentenced in this highest culpability category regardless of the degree of control over victims, which can be considerable.

One benefit of publishing new sentencing guidelines is to increase awareness of the broad range of methods of control available and acknowledge that an apparent absence of physical restraint or violence does not indicate a lack of control (as is also the case in domestic abuse). Research completed in European criminal businesses has found evidence of exploiters deliberately avoiding violence and threats because they attract the attention of authorities and lead to increased sentences<sup>1</sup>. It is important that the culpability scoring is flexible enough to reflect the variety of methods available to offenders.

I see two possible solutions to resolve this issue. One is to include other methods of control in the culpability factors, at the levels the Council feels appropriate. A second might be to exclude specific methods entirely and instead address the degree or extent of control of the victim(s) achieved. The use of physical and sexual assault/threat could then be addressed specifically in the harm section or the aggravating factors.

Examples of other methods which could be included are:

- Deception, fraud and misinformation
- Coercion
- Isolation physical, digital, cultural and linguistic
- Degradation, indignity and antilocution
- Fatigue
- Debt bondage
- Financial ruination such as taking out loans in their name
- Spiritual/religious manipulation

- Deprivation of food and poor nutrition
- Addiction to drugs and alcohol
- Removal of documents
- False interpreters
- Identity theft
- Close supervision and incentivising informing on other victims
- Instilling fear of state authority
- Intimidation by the reputation of the OCG even where direct threat is absent
- Engaging victims in criminality

These involve the calculated control of the victim by the offender, the subjugation of their dignity and will, and the suppression of their ability to leave servitude or ask for help. Where deployed in combination they should attract a high degree of culpability as they represent the mischief which the Modern Slavery Act was intended to address – the control and exploitation of human beings.

I have considered the sentencing guidelines for related and precursor offences to determine how the Council addressed the offender's method of control. The sentencing guidelines for the offence under s.59A Sexual Offences Act, trafficking for sexual exploitation, included references to psychological abuse, coercion, deception and trick in the category 1 harm factors, and no reference to specific method in culpability factors. If the specific offence for trafficking for sexual exploitation does not require a substantial degree of sexual abuse to reach the highest culpability category, it does not seem consistent to require this for the generic trafficking offence.

1.2 Reference to 'substantial financial advantage' should be removed from culpability factors

Modern slavery and human trafficking are normally motivated by financial advantage, but proving this is not a requirement of the offences as it is in, for example, s.1-4 Fraud Act 2006. Modern slavery and trafficking may be intended to bring a gain to the offender, but they are primarily offences committed against the person rather than against property. It may be the case that other offences against the person are also committed for gain, but this does not feature in the sentencing guidelines. Even robbery does not require a view to substantial financial advantage for the highest culpability category. I am, therefore, concerned that the scale of the (intended) financial advantage should be such a prevalent part of these draft sentencing guidelines; the personal impact of modern slavery offending could be very substantial without the offender standing to gain much more than a modest gain. In contrast, relatively low-level exploitation could be more profitable. It would be my view that the depth of the deprivation, control and suffering exacted upon the victim(s) is much more relevant to culpability in slavery offences than the offender's intended gain.

1.3 Targeting of particularly vulnerable individuals is correctly placed in the aggravating factors

It is noted that "Deliberate targeting of particularly vulnerable victims" is included in the guidelines as an aggravating factor. I have considered whether this should be included in the culpability factors and therefore more directly influence the starting point for sentencing. This is a factor that is included in culpability factors for some offences which can take advantage of vulnerability (such as theft and fraud), but in the aggravating factors for others (such as rape and robbery). Modern slavery offending targets vulnerability almost by definition. It is important to acknowledge where particularly susceptible people have been targeted (e.g. children or substance dependant adults), but on balance I believe the guidance has correctly done so at the aggravating factors phase. Including it as a culpability factor might imply that the abuses exacted on less traditionally 'vulnerable' individuals indicate a lesser degree of criminal responsibility when in fact the methods used to control them may be more intense or harmful.

1.4 Multiple victim/large scale offending is correctly placed in the aggravating factors

I have followed with interest the discussion throughout the drafting process of the fact that the culpability stage does not distinguish between single and multiple victim cases, or the scale and scope of the criminal business model employed. In most organised crime, such as drug supply, you would expect to consider culpability at least partly by this method. There is understandable concern that including language to this effect in the higher culpability category would mean that the most inhumane of abuses of individuals in unsophisticated setups would not reach the higher sentencing categories by virtue only of their lack of scale. While many offenders target multiple victims, some typologies such as domestic servitude may not. I am reminded of the case in South Wales<sup>2</sup> where a family held a single individual on a scrapyard and caused him a great deal of physical and psychological harm, while forcing him to work 16 hour days with minimal food and only a squalid caravan for shelter. An unsophisticated MO, a single victim held in a single place and working directly for the offender, but the culpability of the offenders was not diminished by this. In light of this, I agree with the Sentencing Council's decision to exclude this factor from determining culpability and note that it is included in aggravating factors to prompt sentencing judges to consider this element at that stage.

1.5 It is appropriate that "pressure, coercion or intimidation" is included in the lowest culpability category

International efforts to combat trafficking have established the 'non punishment principle' for persons who have been victims of slavery and trafficking and have been compelled to commit crime as a result.<sup>3</sup> The Modern Slavery Act creates a statutory defence under s.45 which is intended to enshrine this protection in domestic law. Combined with the general defence of duress and the consideration of the Public Interest test in the Code for Crown Prosecutors, the courts have held recently (R v A 2020) that the UK has met its international obligations in this area. Offences under the Modern Slavery Act itself are excluded from the statutory defence as per Schedule 4 of the Act. The result of this position is that circumstances may arise where the court must sentence someone for a s.1 or s.2 offence who has themselves been a victim of exploitation. Inclusion in the draft culpability factors of "pressure, coercion or intimidation" is a good reminder that these offenders should be assigned the lowest category of culpability.

Question 2: Do you have any comments on the proposed harm factors?

2.1 Impact of the offending while it is continuing should be included in the harm factors

Modern slavery offences can result in significant and long-term impacts on victims and, while the offending continues, lost freedom and the deprivation of basic necessities. It is laudable therefore that the harm factors in this draft guideline take account of the wide range of impact of offending - physical, psychological, and social. I do not think, however, that the harm factor "Substantial and long-term adverse impact on the victim's daily life" should include the caveat "after the offending has ceased". Modern slavery offences continue over a long period of time and deprive the victim of their liberty, free expression, and private and family life, while they are ongoing. In this they resemble the 'coercive and controlling behaviour' offence in domestic abuse cases. As the preamble to the harm factors states, "loss of personal autonomy is an inherent feature of this offending". It is my belief that the harms present during the offending are as important to recognise as those that remain after it is over, and this would also be consistent with the sentencing guideline for Coercive and Controlling Behaviour. In the same manner that someone who is wrongly imprisoned by the state can claim compensation for that loss of liberty regardless of any long term or lasting effects, a person who is held in servitude is harmed solely by virtue of being so held, and having their life and autonomy interrupted by the offender.

2.2 Substantial financial loss to victims should be included in the higher harm factors

Having discussed in my answer to question 1 why I believe offender financial advantage should not dictate culpability, I believe that the opportunity to address financial harm exists in this section. Categories 3 and 4 reference financial loss but categories 1 and 2 do not. I would like to see reference to substantial financial loss to the victim included in these higher categories, as cases may involve many years of withheld wages and widespread financial damage by means of defaulted credit and loans, benefit fraud, etc. There are also additional categories of harm which the Council may consider mentioning specifically, including sexual, where victims may have been subjected to rapes by multiple persons, and the detrimental consequences which result from being drawn into criminality. For example, the potential criminal justice consequences a victim may face from being forced to beg are significantly less than those of stabbing another person over a drug debt. This disparity in criminal exploitation could be reflected in the harm factors.

2.3 The guidelines should take account of the wider harm and costs of modern slavery

Currently, the harm factors in the draft guidelines focus only on harm to the individual victim. Modern slavery is a criminal business model and wider harm to society results from the operation of businesses using slave labour and poor working conditions.<sup>4</sup> They undercut legitimate businesses which are complying with the law, and encourage other societal harms such as immigration offending, health and safety breaches, and public health risks (such as those highlighted in the Labour Behind the Label report of June 2020 regarding the Covid-19 pandemic<sup>5</sup>). They engage in economic harms such as tax evasion, benefit fraud, corruption and fraudulent bookkeeping. Where the labour they are controlling is, in itself, criminal, these offences undermine public safety and encourage the proliferation of theft, drug offending, weapons and violence. The rise of the 'County Lines' business model for drug dealers in recent years has brought addiction, anti-social behaviour and violence to rural communities and is fuelled by the trafficking of large numbers of (primarily) children. I believe that the sentencing judge should consider this wider societal harm at this stage in the decision making.

Question 3: Do you have any comments on the additional wording at the head of the table?

3.1 The additional wording is appropriate and necessary

I strongly support the inclusion of this paragraph to direct sentencing judges to wider evidence of harm, in addition to that included in the victim's personal statement, highlighting that the nature of slavery and trafficking is that the victim may not identify as such. It should not be taken as lessening the impact of the offence that the victim has not engaged with the court process, and indeed may indicate a particularly closely controlled victim.

3.2 Additional wording is suggested regarding apparent 'consent' to exploitation

I would suggest the inclusion of additional wording regarding apparent victim 'consent' to the nature of the work or the movement, which has been a factor previously identified as mitigation of harm. Where modern slavery offences have been proven in respect of a victim, the sentencing judge should take a deeply critical view of whether the victim was able to give consent to anything which took place at the direction of the offender, be it physical labour, sexual activity, or criminal activity. If we consider the definition of consent used for sexual offences, the victim must "agree by choice, and [have] the freedom and capacity to make that choice”<sup>6</sup>. Consent is positive and active and differs from submission<sup>7</sup>. A victim subjected to slavery, servitude or exploitation is very unlikely to be able to have the freedom and capacity to make a free choice without adverse consequence. The rebuttable presumption in sexual offending that consent is not present where the victim is, at the time of the act, unlawfully detained or was caused to fear violence would be used against them appears very relevant to modern slavery cases.<sup>8</sup> It is also notable that a specific caution against assuming consent negated criminal harm was inserted into the Modern Slavery Bill by the House of Lords.<sup>9</sup> The methods of control that were relevant to the offender’s culpability should be considered carefully when deciding what activity the victim of a modern slavery offence chose to undertake and what can be attributed to the offender’s actions.

Question 4: Do you have any comments on the proposed sentence levels?

4.1 It is submitted that the Act was intended to raise sentences for slavery offences but has not done so

A year after the Modern Slavery Act was enacted, the then Prime Minister Theresa May wrote in the Sunday Telegraph that modern slavery was a “barbaric evil” that was “the human rights issue of our time”. She wrote that the Act “delivered tough new penalties to put slave masters behind bars where they belong, with life sentences for the worst offenders.”<sup>10</sup> It is apparent that her intent in presenting this bill before Parliament was to strengthen the United Kingdoms’ response to modern slavery by deterring offenders and making this country a hostile place for their exploitative business models. The severity with which she viewed the offences is apparent from the decision to pass a maximum penalty of life imprisonment. I therefore disagree with the Council’s interpretation of Mrs. May’s comment about the “worst offenders” as indicating a lack of appetite for an overall uplift in sentencing.

The Independent Anti-Slavery Commissioner’s office has examined a range of sentences passed both under the 2015 Act, and under the legislation in force prior to it. Comparing sentence lengths between cases is clearly difficult as the nuance of circumstance is lost, but it is consistently observed that the sentences are very low for such serious offences, and that the passing of the Act has not resulted in a noticeable increase in sentences despite the increase of the maximum penalty to life. In a sample of 45 cases we have ready access to, the median sentence passed was 5 years 6 months (in line with the Council’s own observations) and the lowest was 13 months. Although the sample does contain recent sentences that are longer, these are exceptional. Many sentencing remarks from after the passing of the Act reference authorities based directly or indirectly on the previous legislation, which is likely why little increase is seen after 2015. The decision of Parliament to significantly increase the penalty does not appear to have been widely translated into practice.

4.2 Sentences currently passed often fail to reflect the severity of the offence and the draft guidelines insufficiently address this

It has been noted by correspondents with the Commissioner that sentences being passed for modern slavery offending are often of the scale that would be expected for burglars or drug offenders, rather than organised traffickers in human beings. Thames Valley Police, for example, identified a case where a man was sentenced to 5 years for two counts of s.1 and two of s.2 offences under the 2015 Act. His offending involved the exploitation of two mentally vulnerable victims using drug addiction and debt bondage for over a year. Yet his son, who was caught serendipitously during the investigation with an amount of class A and B drugs sufficient to convince a jury of intent to supply, received a very similar sentence. The officer in the case found this difficult to reconcile with the demonstrable human impact of the slavery offending.<sup>11</sup>

It is the Commissioner's view that these sentences are inadequate to achieve the goal of deterring modern slavery offences, and ending the impression that it is a 'low risk high reward' crime type which can be practiced with some impunity in the UK. Offenders who violate the liberty and dignity of victims by treating them as property, working them for their own financial benefit on a large scale and moving them around the country by force, threat and deception should receive sentences which are commensurate with this egregious criminality. It cannot be appropriate, or the expectation of the public, that being concerned in the trafficking of drugs poses a greater risk of a significant custodial sentence than being concerned in the trafficking and exploitation of people. It is strongly hoped that the result of the publication of this guidance will result in longer sentences being applied to modern slavery offenders.

In considering the matrix of sentences in the draft guidelines, I remain concerned that, with the culpability and harm factors as they currently are, sentences are unlikely to increase significantly following their implementation, especially in the area of labour abuse.

Where the IASC office is aware of long sentences being given (10+ years), almost invariably this is linked to sexual exploitation – forcing women into prostitution. This is consistent with the draft guidelines as it is likely to attract the highest culpability category but illustrates the point that I raised when discussing culpability about underestimating the severity of other forms of the offence. When labour exploitation cases are separated out from our examples, the average sentence passed drops to 4 years, compared to 8 years 7 months for sexual exploitation. Under the draft guidelines as they stand, such cases are very unlikely to ever achieve culpability category A or harm category 1 unless there is serious violence involved, limiting the starting point to 8 years at most. It is accepted that the purpose of sentencing guidelines is to set out a spectrum of severity for an offence type, and that in making one aspect more serious it cannot be avoided that other aspects are consequently less serious. But by focusing on sexual abuse and serious violence (already criminalised by other legislation), the effect is that the specific mischief addressed by the Modern Slavery Act is minimised.

Question 5: Do you have any comments on the proposed aggravating and mitigating factors?

Some of my commentary on the aggravating factors is reflected in my answers to questions 1 and 2 which I will not repeat except to reiterate the point that the methods of control (for example, the factors 'deliberate isolation' and 'passport or identity documents removed') reflect in my view the offender's culpability and should feature at step 1.

5.1 The word 'restrain' should be replaced with 'control'

The final aggravating factor, "substantial measures taken to restrain the victim" appears to reawaken the unhelpful stereotype of physical restraint which the Council has carefully exorcised from the culpability section. I would suggest the wording "substantial measures taken to control the victim" would direct the sentencing judge to the same point without implying a physical barrier (while allowing one to be considered if present). The aggravating factors should rightly reflect those circumstances where the offender has taken multiple or drastic steps to achieve the victim's submission and where the cruelty exacted has gone beyond that which is necessary to commit the offence. I therefore agree with the inclusion of the factor "gratuitous degradation of victim" to capture the more extreme actions of perpetrators.

5.2 Additional elements of offending may be considered aggravating

It is positive that some specific behaviours of traffickers are included in the aggravating factors, such as removing passports and other documents. Consideration should be given to including other aspects of offending as 'aggravating' such as:

- Other crimes committed as a result of the modern slavery offending (e.g. theft, drug supply)
- Significant financial advantage (if moved from 'culpability' as suggested)
- Aspects of identity theft – such as obtaining benefits or loans in the name of victims
- Risks to public health or safety as a result of offending (e.g. County Lines drug dealing, or work conditions which spread disease)
- Conditions (accommodation, food) of victim particularly squalid or of inadequate quality
- Removing or keeping a child from their legal guardian
- Legitimate companies undercut/out-competed by use of slave labour

5.3 Mitigating factors appear appropriate for the new guidelines

The mitigating factors appear appropriate and, again, fittingly include the situation of an offender who themselves has been trafficked in the past, as this is relevant to the 'alpha victim' scenario where prior victims of slavery progress into being recruiters and enforcers themselves. I have no further comments on the mitigating factors.

Question 6: Do you have any comments on the reference to the ancillary orders at step 7?

As well as achieving deterrent sentences for offenders, it is important that victims get the best chance of receiving reparations for the injustices they have suffered. I am pleased to see that guidelines include an explanation of Reparation Orders under the Modern Slavery Act and hope that this will increase their use.

Drawing attention to Slavery and Trafficking Prevention Orders is also appropriate as these provide long term control measures to prevent reoffending both while serving a sentence and after release. It may be appropriate to remind the sentencing judge of the Home Office Guidance on these orders which suggests a pre-sentencing report could be of great value for determining proportionate and effective conditions.<sup>12</sup>

Question 7: Do you have any other comments on the guideline for section 1 and section 2 offences?

No further comment.

Question 8: Do you have any comments on the approach to section 4 guidance?

The approach to sentencing section 4 offences, taken from the guidance for the analogous sexual offence, appears appropriate and the severity of the principle offence committed should naturally determine the starting point and range for this offence. Although no specific aggravating or mitigating factors are mentioned in this section as it is presumed those for the principle offence would apply, it may be of value to draw specific attention to the mitigation already discussed. This should be afforded to those who are themselves victims of slavery and trafficking offences, as the non-punishment principle and the analogous domestic law, unique to this offence type, may not be familiar to sentencing judges.

<sup>12</sup> "Guidance on Slavery and Trafficking Prevention Orders and Slavery and Trafficking Risk Orders under Part 2 of the Modern Slavery Act 2015", Home Office Statutory Guidance, April 2017.

Question 9: Do you have any comments on the approach to section 30 guidance?

The guidance appears to be appropriately and succinctly worded and the analogy drawn with other breach offences appears sound. I have no further comment on this section.

Question 10: Is there anything else you wish to say about the proposed sentencing guidelines, which has not been covered elsewhere in this document?

The Commissioner believes that there is significant value in including the voices of survivors in the drafting of policy and guidelines in the field of modern slavery and human trafficking. Their perspective may identify factors which professionals who have never been subjected to these offences would not. If it has not done so already, I would encourage the Council through this consultation or other means, to actively seek the views of MSHT survivors.

Question 11: Do you consider that any of the factors in the draft guidelines, or the ways in which they are expressed could risk being interpreted in ways which could lead to discrimination against particular groups?

I have not identified any such issues in the draft guidance.

Question 12: Are there any other equality and diversity issues the guidelines should consider?

No further comments.

STEP ONE*Determining the offence category*CULPABILITY

In assessing culpability, the court should weigh up all the factors of the case, including the offender's role, to determine the appropriate level. Where there are characteristics present which fall under different categories, or where the level of the offender's role is affected by the very small scale of the operation, the court should balance these characteristics to reach a fair assessment of the offender's culpability.

A- High Culpability	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Leading role in the offending</li> <li>• Expectation of substantial financial or other material advantage</li> <li>• High degree of planning/premeditation</li> <li>• Use or threat of a substantial degree of physical violence towards victim(s) or their families</li> <li>• Use or threat of a substantial degree of sexual violence or abuse towards victim(s) or their families</li> </ul>
B- Medium culpability	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Significant role in the offending</li> <li>• Involves others in the offending whether by coercion, intimidation, exploitation or reward</li> <li>• Expectation of significant financial or other material advantage</li> <li>• Some planning/premeditation</li> <li>• Use or threat of some physical violence towards victim(s) or their families</li> <li>• Use or threat of some sexual violence or abuse towards victim(s) or their families</li> <li>• Other threats towards victim(s) or their families</li> <li>• Other cases falling between A and C because: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>○ Factors in both high and lower categories are present which balance each other out and/or</li> <li>○ The offender's culpability falls between the factors as described in A and C</li> </ul> </li> </ul>
C- Lower culpability	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Engaged by pressure, coercion or intimidation, or has been a victim of slavery or trafficking related to this offence</li> <li>• Performs limited function under direction</li> <li>• Limited understanding/knowledge of the offending</li> <li>• Expectation of limited or no financial or other material advantage</li> <li>• Little or no planning/premeditation</li> </ul>

Use the factors given in the table below to identify the Harm category. If the offence involved multiple victims or took place over a significant period of time sentencers may consider moving up a harm category or moving up substantially within a category range.

The assessment of harm may be assisted by available expert evidence, but may be made on the basis of factual evidence from the victim, including evidence contained in a Victim Personal Statement (VPS). Whether a VPS provides evidence which is sufficient for a finding of serious harm depends on the circumstances of the particular case and the contents of the VPS. However, the absence of a VPS (or other impact statement) should not be taken to indicate the absence of harm.

Loss of personal autonomy is an inherent feature of this offending and is reflected in sentencing levels. The nature of the relationship between offender and victim in modern slavery cases may mean that the victim does not recognise themselves as such, may minimise the seriousness of their treatment, may see the perpetrator as a friend or supporter, or may choose not to give evidence through shame, regret or fear.

Sentencers should therefore be careful not to assume that absence of evidence of harm from those trafficked or kept in slavery, servitude or in forced or compulsory labour indicates a lack of harm or seriousness. A close examination of all the particular circumstances will be necessary.

Category 1	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Exposure of victim(s) to high risk of death</li> </ul> A category 2 offence may also be elevated to category 1 by – <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• The extreme nature of one or more factors</li> <li>• The extreme impact caused by a combination of factors</li> </ul>
Category 2	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Serious physical harm which has a substantial and/or long-term effect</li> <li>• Serious psychological harm which has a substantial and/or long-term effect</li> <li>• Substantial and long-term adverse impact on the victim's daily life after the offending has ceased</li> <li>• Victim(s) deceived or coerced into sexual activity</li> </ul>
Category 3	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Some physical harm</li> <li>• Some psychological harm</li> <li>• Significant financial loss/disadvantage to the victim(s)</li> <li>• Exposure of victim(s) to additional risk of serious physical or psychological harm</li> <li>• Other cases falling between categories 2 and 4 because: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>○ Factors in both categories 2 and 4 are present which balance each other out and/or</li> <li>○ The level of harm falls between the factors as described in categories 2 and 4</li> </ul> </li> </ul>
Category 4	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Limited physical harm</li> <li>• Limited psychological harm</li> <li>• Limited financial loss/disadvantage to the victim(s)</li> </ul>

Starting point and category range

Having determined the category at step one, the court should use the corresponding starting point to reach a sentence within the category range below. The starting point applies to all offenders irrespective of plea or previous convictions

Harm	Culpability
	A	B	C
Category 1	Starting Point 14 years' custody Category Range 10 - 18 years' custody	Starting Point 12 years' custody Category Range 9 - 14 years' custody	Starting Point 8 years' custody Category Range 6 - 10 years' custody
Category 2	Starting Point 10 years' custody Category Range 8 - 12 years' custody	Starting Point 8 years' custody Category Range 6 - 10 years' custody	Starting Point 4 years' custody Category Range 3 - 7 years' custody
Category 3	Starting Point 8 years' custody Category Range 6 - 10 years' custody	Starting Point 6 years' custody Category Range 5 - 8 years' custody	Starting Point 2 years' custody Category Range 1 - 4 years' custody
Category 4	Starting Point 5 years' custody Category Range 4 - 7 years' custody	Starting Point 3 years' custody Category Range 1 - 5 years' custody	Starting Point 26 weeks' custody Category Range High level Community Order – 18 months' custody

Where another offence or offences arise out of the same incident or facts concurrent sentences reflecting the overall criminality of offending will ordinarily be appropriate: please refer to the Totality guideline and step six of this guideline.

Below is a non-exhaustive list of additional elements providing the context of the offence and factors relating to the offender. Identify whether a combination of these or other relevant factors should result in any upward or downward adjustment from the sentence arrived at so far.

Care should be taken to avoid double counting factors already taken into account in assessing culpability

Factors increasing seriousness

Statutory aggravating factors:

- Previous convictions, having regard to a) the nature of the offence to which the conviction relates and its relevance to the current offence; and b) the time that has elapsed since the conviction

- Offence committed whilst on bail
- Offence motivated by, or demonstrating hostility based on any of the following characteristics or presumed characteristics of the victim: religion, race, disability, sexual orientation or transgender identity

Other aggravating factors:

A1 – Offending took place over a long period of time (in the context of these offences, this is likely to mean months or years) where not taken into account at step 1

A2 – Steps taken to prevent the victim reporting the offence or obtaining assistance

A3 – Deliberate targeting of victim who is particularly vulnerable (due to age or other reason)

A4 – Victim's passport or identity documents removed

A5 – Gratuitous degradation of victim

A6 – Large-scale, sophisticated and/or commercial operation (where not taken into account at step 1)

A7 – Abuse of trust/responsibility

A8 – Substantial measures taken to restrain the victim

A9 – Victim forced to commit criminal offences (whether or not he/she would be able to raise a defence if charged with those offences)

Factors reducing seriousness or reflecting personal mitigation

M1 – No recent or relevant convictions

M2 – Offender has been a victim of slavery/trafficking in circumstances unrelated to this offence

M3 – Good character and/or exemplary conduct

M4 – Remorse

M5 – Sole or primary carer for dependent relatives

M6 – Age/lack of maturity

M7 – Mental disorder or learning disability

M8 – Physical disability or serious medical condition requiring urgent, intensive or long-term treatment

M9 - Offender co-operated with investigation, made early admissions and/or voluntarily reported offending

STEP THREE

Consider any factors which indicate a reduction for assistance to the prosecution

The court should take into account section 74 of the Sentencing Code (reduction in sentence for assistance to prosecution) and any other rule of law by virtue of which an offender may receive a discounted sentence in consequence of assistance given (or offered) to the prosecutor or investigator.

STEP FOUR

Reduction for guilty pleas

The court should take account of any potential reduction for a guilty plea in accordance with section 73 of the Sentencing Code and the Reduction in Sentence for a Guilty Plea guideline.

STEP FIVE

Dangerousness

The court should consider:

- 1) whether having regard to the criteria contained in Chapter 6 of Part 10 of the Sentencing Code it would be appropriate to impose a life sentence (sections 274 and 285)
- 2) whether having regard to sections 273 and 283 of the Sentencing Code it would be appropriate to impose a life sentence.
- 3) whether having regard to the criteria contained in Chapter 6 of Part 10 of the Sentencing Code it would be appropriate to impose an extended sentence (sections 266 and 279)

When sentencing offenders to a life sentence under these provisions, the notional determinate sentence should be used as the basis for the setting of a minimum term.

STEP SIX

Totality principle

If sentencing an offender for more than one offence, or where the offender is already serving a sentence, consider whether the total sentence is just and proportionate to the overall offending behaviour in accordance with the Totality guideline.

STEP SEVEN

Ancillary orders

In all cases, the court must consider whether to make a compensation order and/or other ancillary orders. The following are most relevant in modern slavery cases:

Slavery and trafficking prevention orders

Under section 14 of the Modern Slavery Act 2015, a court may make a slavery and trafficking prevention order against an offender convicted of a slavery or human trafficking offence, if it is satisfied that

- there is a risk that the offender may commit a slavery or human trafficking offence, and

- it is necessary to make the order for the purpose of protecting persons generally, or particular persons, from the physical or psychological harm which would be likely to occur if the offender committed such an offence.

DROP-DOWN

- The effect of a slavery and trafficking prevention order is set out in section 17 of the Modern Slavery Act 2015, the power to make such an order on convictions is contained in section 14 of the Act.
- An order can only be made if the court is satisfied that (i) there is a risk that the offender may commit a slavery or human trafficking offence and (ii) the order is necessary (not merely desirable or helpful) for the purpose of protecting persons generally, or particular persons, from the physical or psychological harm which would be likely to occur if the offender committed such an offence. The Act does not require the court to apply any particular standard of proof.
- The risk that the offender may commit a slavery or human trafficking offence must be real, not remote, and must be sufficient to justify the making of such an order. In considering whether such a risk is present in a particular case, the court is entitled to have regard to all the information before it, including the contents of a pre-sentence report, or information in relation to any previous convictions, or in relation to any previous failure to comply with court orders.”
- In determining whether any order is necessary, the court must consider whether the risk is sufficiently addressed by the nature and length of the sentence imposed, and/or the presence of other controls on the offender. The court should consider the ability of a Chief Officer of Police to apply for an order if it becomes necessary to do so in the future.
- The criterion of necessity also applies to the individual terms of the order. The order may prohibit the defendant from doing things in any part of the United Kingdom, and anywhere outside the United Kingdom. These prohibitions must be both reasonable and proportionate to the purpose for which it is made. The court should take into account any adverse effect of the order on the offender's rehabilitation, and the realities of life in an age of electronic means of communication.
- The terms of the order must be clear, so that the offender can readily understand what they are prohibited from doing and those responsible for enforcing the order can readily identify any breach.
- The order can be for a fixed period of at least 5 years or until further order. The order may specify that some of its prohibitions have effect until further order and some for a fixed period and may specify different periods for different prohibitions.
- A draft order must be provided to the court and to all defence advocates in good time to enable its terms to be considered before the sentencing hearing.

Slavery and trafficking reparation orders

Where a confiscation order has been made by the Crown Court under section 6 of the Proceeds of Crime Act 2002 the court may make a slavery and trafficking reparation order under section 8 of the 2015 Act, requiring the offender to pay compensation to the victim for any harm resulting from an offence under sections 1, 2 or 4 of that Act. In practice, the reparation will come out of the amount taken under the confiscation order. In every eligible case, the court must consider whether to make a slavery and trafficking reparation order, and if one is not made the judge must give reasons. However, a slavery and trafficking reparation order cannot be made if the court has made a compensation order under section 134 of the Sentencing Code.

Restraining order

Where an offender is convicted of any offence, the court may make a restraining order (section 360 of the Sentencing Code). The order may prohibit the offender from doing anything for the purpose of protecting the victim of the offence, or any other person mentioned in the order, from further conduct which amounts to harassment or will cause a fear of violence.

The order may have effect for a specified period or until further order.

Forfeiture

A court convicting someone on indictment of human trafficking under section 2 of the 2015 Act may order the forfeiture of a vehicle, ship or aircraft used or intended to be used in connection with the offence of which the person is convicted (see section 11 of the 2015 Act).

STEP EIGHT

Reasons

Section 52 of the Sentencing Code imposes a duty to give reasons for, and explain the effect of, the sentence.

STEP NINE

Consideration for time spent on bail

The court must consider whether to give credit for time spent on bail in accordance with section 240A of the Criminal Justice Act 2003 and section 325 of the Sentencing Code.

Committing offence with intent to commit a human trafficking offence

Slavery

Modern Slavery Act 2015 section 4

Triable only on indictment (if kidnapping or false imprisonment committed), otherwise triable either way

Maximum: Life imprisonment (if kidnapping or false imprisonment committed), otherwise 10 years' custody

The starting point and range should be commensurate with that for the preliminary offence actually committed but with an enhancement to reflect the intention to commit a human trafficking offence. The enhancement will vary depending on the nature and seriousness of the intended trafficking offence, and the seriousness of the preliminary offence, and the extent to which the offender was themselves the victim of modern slavery, pressure, coercion or intimidation, but up to 2 years' custody is suggested as a suitable enhancement. Sentencers should also take into account the totality of offending (see the Totality guideline in particular where the preliminary offence or other modern slavery offences are to be sentenced alongside the section 4 offence.

Breach of a Slavery and Trafficking Prevention Order/ Breach of a Slavery and Trafficking Risk Order

Modern Slavery Act 2015, s.30

Triable either way

Maximum: 5 years' imprisonment

In sentencing an offence under section 30, a court is entitled to use, and may be assisted by, a guideline for an analogous offence subject to differences in the elements of the offences and the statutory maxima. Depending on the nature of the particular slavery and trafficking risk, an analogous offence may be one or more of the following:

- Breach of a sexual harm prevention order
- Breach of a criminal behaviour order

The court will also wish to consider the General guideline.

(1) Section 32 of the Animal Welfare Act 2006 (post-conviction powers: imprisonment or fine) is amended as follows.

(2) In subsection \(1\) (penalty for offence under any of sections 4, 5, 6\(1\) and \(2\), 7 and 8 of the Animal Welfare Act 2006), for the words from "on summary conviction" to the end substitute

"—

(a) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months, or to a fine, or to both;

(b) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 5 years, or to a fine, or to both."

(3) After subsection \(4\) insert—

"(4A) In relation to an offence committed before the commencement of paragraph 24(2) of Schedule 22 to the Sentencing Act 2020, the reference in subsection (1)(a) to 12 months is to be read as a reference to 6 months."

(4) In subsection \(5\), omit "(1)(a)".

A Commons Library Briefing of 10 March 2021 sets out the background to and the history of the legislation. It gives the following information on sentencing trends:

In 2018, 633 people were sentenced for offences under sections 4 to 8 of the Animal Welfare Act 2006 in England and Wales. Of these, 65(10%) were sentenced to immediate custody. In each of the past 10 years, between 6% and 11% of people convicted of these offences were sentenced to immediate custody.

Sentencing guidelines for animal cruelty were reviewed in April 2017 with the aim of ensuring "that the most serious cases of animal cruelty receive appropriate severe sentences, within the available maximum penalty".

Second Reading took place on 23 October 2020. Introducing the Bill, its sponsor, Chris Loder MP (Con), set out how it would amend the sentencing currently available to courts under the under the Animal Welfare Act 2006.

I am pleased to say that the Bill introduces one of the toughest punishments in the world and will bring us into line with the maximum penalties available in other Commonwealth countries, including those in Australia, Canada, New Zealand and India, which are all at five years' imprisonment. With this Bill, we will lead the way in Europe on animal sentencing, where the average custodial sentence for animal welfare offences is currently just two years. It is a simple, yet vital measure that will ensure perpetrators who harm an animal by, for example, causing unnecessary suffering, mutilation or poisoning, face the full force of the law. That includes cases of systematic cruelty, such as the deliberate, calculating and callous behaviour of ruthless gangs who use dog fighting to fuel organised crime. The Bill will mean that the courts will have sentences at their disposal commensurate with the most serious cases, so that the punishment fits the crime. This will send a clear signal.

Shadow Secretary of State, Luke Pollard (Lab), moved amendment 1 in clause 127 which would require the seriousness of an offence to be increased in cases where a person found guilty had also filmed the offence or posted a video online of themselves committing the offence. He explained that the reason was to stop encouraging others from repeating similar acts. This simple amendment would make it a more serious animal cruelty offence for the purpose of sentencing if the guilty person had filmed themselves committing the abuse. In a digital age, we see more and more cases of people filming abuse of animals, partly for their own perverse enjoyment, partly because they want to share the film on social media, and partly because they fail to recognise that in so doing they encourage others to do the same.

Luke Pollard went on to give examples of specific cases of animal cruelty that had been posted online and highlighted research from the RSPCA that showed “at least 46% of young people have witnessed animal cruelty: 28% have seen it on TV or in a film, and 18% have witnessed it on social media.”

In response, Victoria Prentis (Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs) commented that the sentencing guidelines, drawn up by the Sentencing Council had been reviewed in 2017 after public consultation. She went on to say that they include guidelines on the “the use of technology to publicise or promote cruelty” which is already considered to be an aggravating factor. She also highlighted Section 127(1) of the Communications Act 2003 which, “creates a specific offence of sending grossly offensive, indecent, obscene or menacing messages over a public electronic communications network.” In her concluding remarks the Minister stated that:

...there are existing options to ensure that the offenders who film and upload or distribute footage of their animal cruelty are met with an appropriate response. This is a horrific crime, and filming it to share with others is beyond comprehension. We will discuss this matter further with the Sentencing Council, and when it reviews the guidelines we will ensure that this point is raised during the public consultation. On that basis, I ask the hon. Gentleman not to press the amendment.

Luke Pollard withdrew the amendment explaining that the opposition would be seeking to explore it further on Report.

The Explanatory Notes state as follows:

Overview of the Bill

1. The Bill increases the maximum penalty for specific offences related to animal welfare in England and Wales. It does so by extending the current maximum penalty, specified under the Animal Welfare Act 2006, of six months and/or an unlimited fine to a penalty of five years and/or an unlimited fine. These offences therefore become triable either way, and may be heard in a magistrates' court or the Crown Court.

Policy background

2. This Bill amends the Animal Welfare Act 2006 (“the Act”). The Act sets out a maximum penalty of six months imprisonment and/or an unlimited fine for the more serious 'prevention of harm' offences. There are five such offences under section 32(1) of the Animal Welfare Act 2006:
  - a. causing unnecessary suffering (section 4, Animal Welfare Act 2006);
  - b. carrying out a non-exempted mutilation (section 5, Animal Welfare Act 2006);
  - c. docking the tail of a dog except where permitted (section 6(1) and 6(2), Animal Welfare Act 2006);
  - d. administering a poison to an animal (section 7, Animal Welfare Act 2006); and
  - e. involvement in an animal fight (section 8, Animal Welfare Act 2006).
3. There have been a number of recent cases related to these offences in which judges have expressed a desire to impose a higher penalty than that currently provided for under the Animal Welfare Act 2006. There is a particular desire to increase the penalties available in the case of crimes that relate to deliberate, calculating and sadistic behaviour.

4. Members of Parliament, wider stakeholders and the public have also sought to increase maximum penalties for animal welfare offences so that they exceed the current European average of 2.04 years. The Bill meets both of these needs by increasing the maximum penalties for the most serious offences under the Animal Welfare Act 2006 to five years and/or an unlimited fine.
5. The increase in maximum penalties will not apply to those offences listed in section 32(2) of the Animal Welfare Act 2006: not taking reasonable steps to ensure welfare (section 9); breach of a licence condition (section 13(6)); and breach of a disqualification order (section 34(9)). These offences are generally considered less serious, and rarely receive the existing maximum penalty. Moreover, the level of fine applied to these offences has recently been increased since the Legal Aid, Sentencing and Punishment of Offenders Act 2012, which converted existing level 5 fines into unlimited fines.
6. The draft sentencing clauses were published for public consultation and pre-legislative scrutiny on 12 December 2017 as part of the Government's Animal Welfare (Sentencing and Recognition of Sentience) Bill. The consultation closed on 31 January 2018 and the summary of responses document published on 7 August 2018. Defra received 9,084 direct responses to the consultation. 70% of respondents agreed with the new maximum penalties. In the summary of responses document, Government committed to bring forward the sentencing clauses in a separate Bill as recommended by the EFRA Committee's scrutiny report on the Bill.
7. On 26 June 2019, the Animal Welfare (Sentencing) Bill was introduced to Parliament in the House of Commons. Passage of the Bill beyond Committee Stage was disrupted due to Parliamentary activity at this time where it fell following prorogation and then later dissolution of Parliament.
8. Chris Loder MP introduced the Animal Welfare (Sentencing) Bill as a Private Member's Bill on 5th February 2020.

Legal background

9. The majority of the relevant legal background is explained in the policy background section of these Notes. Two additional legal issues are raised below, one in relation to the current drafting of section 32(1) of the Animal Welfare Act 2006, and the second in relation to the requirement to change the mode of trial.
10. The current drafting of section 32(1) of the Animal Welfare Act 2006 lists the maximum penalty as imprisonment for a term not exceeding 51 weeks or a fine, as opposed to the maximum imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months as discussed above. This is explained by section 32(5) of the Animal Welfare Act 2006. Section 32(5) provides that in relation to an offence committed before the commencement of section 281(5) of the Criminal Justice Act 2003, the reference in section 32(1)(a) to 51 weeks is to be read as a reference to six months. As at the date of the publication of the Bill, section 281(5) of the Criminal Justice Act 2003 has not been commenced. The maximum imprisonment term for offences under section 32(1) of the Animal Welfare Act 2006 therefore remains six months.
11. Magistrates' courts do not have the power to impose penalties greater than six months.<sup>1</sup> As a result of increasing the maximum penalty available for the offences under section 32(1) of the Animal Welfare Act 2006 to a period of five years it is necessary for the Bill to make these offences triable either way.

Territorial extent and application.

12. Clause 2 sets out the territorial extent of the Bill, that is the jurisdictions which the Bill forms part of the law of. The extent of a Bill can be different from its application. Application is about where a Bill produces a practical effect. This Bill both extends and applies to England and Wales. The commentary on individual provisions (or groups of provisions) of the Bill includes a paragraph explaining their extent and application.
13. There is a convention that Westminster will not normally legislate with regard to matters that are within the legislative competence of the Scottish Parliament, the National Assembly for Wales or the Northern Ireland Assembly without the consent of the legislature concerned. Issues concerning animal welfare in Wales are considered to be within the legislative competence of the National Assembly for Wales. The Bill requires a Legislative Consent Motion from the National Assembly for Wales. See the table in Annex A for a summary of the position regarding territorial extent and application in the United Kingdom.

Commentary on provisions of Bill

Clause 1: Mode of trial and maximum penalty for certain animal welfare offences

14. Section 32(1) of the Animal Welfare Act 2006 provides that particular offences should carry a maximum penalty of 51 weeks imprisonment and/or a level 5 fine.
15. In practice, this is as a maximum penalty of 6 months and an unlimited fine. This is because section 32(5) specifies a maximum penalty of 6 months for offences committed before the commencement of section 281(5) of the Criminal Justice Act 2003. To date, this section has not been commenced.
16. This clause changes the maximum penalty available for the following offences only:
  - a. Causing unnecessary suffering (section 4, Animal Welfare Act 2006);
  - b. Carrying out a non-exempted mutilation (section 5, Animal Welfare Act 2006);
  - c. Docking the tail of a dog except where permitted (section 6(1) and 6(2), Animal Welfare Act 2006);
  - d. Administering a poison to an animal (section 7, Animal Welfare Act 2006);
  - and
  - e. Involvement in an animal fight (section 8, Animal Welfare Act 2006).
17. The existing maximum penalty, outlined above, is retained if the offender is summarily convicted. However offenders may now receive a higher penalty of up to 5 years imprisonment and/or an unlimited fine if they are convicted on trial by indictment.
18. Magistrates' courts do not have the power to impose penalties greater than six months. Section 154(1) of the Criminal Justice Act 2003 was to increase the maximum custodial sentence imposable by a magistrate's court to 12 months. Section 154(1) will be repealed by the Sentencing Act 2020 but an equivalent provision is contained in paragraph 24(2) of Schedule 22 to the 2020 Act. Section 32(4A) of the Animal Welfare Act 2006 inserted by this clause ensures that the appropriate penalties are available to magistrate's courts until the relevant provisions are commenced.

Clause 2: Extent, Commencement and Short Title

19. This clause provides for the Bill to extend to England and Wales; that the Bill will come into force two months after Royal Assent; and that the application of revised maximum penalties is not retrospective and does not apply to offences committed before the Bill comes into force. The clause also specifies the short title of the Bill.

Commencement

20. The Bill is due to commence two months after Royal Assent.
